

FRIENDS

By Branden, Yu Hong, Yu Wen and Jordan

Man is a social animal. He can't live alone. Men of similar disposition are naturally attracted towards one another. In the course of time, intimacy grows between them. They begin to trust one another. This is called friendship.

What is Friendship?

Friendship is a feeling of mutual trust, support and affection between two people or more. A friend can be a companion, workmate, classmate or any people with whom our feelings of affection are attached. There is a mutual exchange of emotion, trust and support among friends.

How is friendship formed?

Friends, generally grows between people of the same age and dispositions. They have similar passions, emotions and sentiments. When a student meets another student in a classroom, he finds that they both have the same vision and objective for life. This shared vision towards the same goal helps them to get closer and help one another. This is why, generally, people of the same age become friends.

Even in offices, various people work together as a team to achieve organizational goals. The achievement of the organizational targets will improve their chances of individual success. In some cases, we make our best friends for life at school.

What is the difference between real friends and fake friends?

Real friendship is rare. Many people gather round men with power to serve their own selfish needs. They leave their friend when their power is gone. Such friends are more dangerous than enemies and people should be cautious of such parasites. It is difficult to find a real friend. A real friend is someone who helps his friend when in need. He stands by his friends in the day of his adversity. As the saying goes, 'A friend in need is a friend indeed.'

What are the benefits of having a friend?

Friends can keep each other company, be good mentors when we are confused or can't make decisions or trust them to hide our secrets.

In conclusion, we should find friends we can trust.

